Since the development of cameras over one hundred years ago, people have considered one's pictures as a good way to show other people what they are like. But this is as many of us have learned is only a portrait of the outer person, not the inner person which is our true self. It is one's inner or true self that is the final determinant in achieving success, handling life's challenges and difficulties and of course, building healthy interpersonal relationships. The outer physical appearance of a person, which a picture represents, reveals very little about that all important inner person. Certainly one's physical attractiveness is an important factor in that all mysterious phenomenon we call, "chemistry." But often, a picture of a person, or their appearance is misleading to understanding who they really are on the inside. Like most syndication columnists today, my picture is at the top of this article to satisfy some mild curiosity you might have about what I look like, but be wary about what you may attribute to my character from my or anyone's picture or physical appearance.

Just as one's appearance or a picture of a person portrays their outer physical dimensions, think of one's handwriting as portraying their inner or true self. So, when you attempt to know someone, I mean really know someone, consider an analysis of their handwriting. One's handwriting is a portrait of the inner person or character just as one's picture is a portrait or describes the outer physical person.

So, when you clean out your closet and happen upon old love letters with pictures, or reminisce through an old school year book and see the pictures of all your classmates, look carefully and value the handwritten notes even more than the pictures. That handwritten note, "Hey Joey, have a great summer! See you next year. Signed, Charlene," can tell you a lot more about that person than their picture.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Question: About five years ago the girl of my dreams dropped me and ended up marrying somebody else. I never really got over her but I kept her letters that she wrote to me while we were together. Would you analyze her handwriting for me to tell me what it is that I love about her so much?
Bill F.

Answer: We would be glad to take your money analyzing the handwriting of the woman of your dreams who dumped you. An analysis of the handwriting will tell you all about how she thinks, deals with relationships, honesty, emotional maturity, angers, fears, and so on. What we can't tell you by analyzing her handwriting however, is why you think she is your dream girl if she dropped you. For that answer, we will need your handwriting.

Question: I was looking through my college yearbook and noticing the notes written on the inside cover to me by the two girl friends I had last year. What is really interesting is that their handwritings look very similar to each other and their personalities are similar too. What can I learn from this?

Jeff T.

Answer: Assuming the fact that the handwritings produced by your girlfriends do indeed look similar does suggest strong personality similarities as well. If these ladies were relatively good matches for you, then I suggest an examination of the handwriting of your next potential girl friend to see how her handwriting compares with the previous two. If the two ladies were unsuitable for you, a different type of handwriting in your next relationship is recommended.

If you would like to submit your handwriting (and maybe someone else's) for the possibility of appearing in an upcoming article, please write with your question to:

Penguin Willy... Will He?

Our publisher, Eugene Goedel who is known as "Penguin Willy," has courageously offered his handwriting to us for analysis. It is an act of courage when you consider the outcome of the analysis we did last month on Ted Kaczynski, the Unabomber suspect. But have no fear, publisher Eugene Goedel is no Ted Kaczynski... in fact, he is actually quite normal, at least compared to the Unabomber suspect.

So take a look and see the handwriting of your publisher with some personality attributes that give you some answers as to why he is the publisher and single!

Handy Hello, Penguin Willy is coming out of the closet. The article under Colton Kane & Rainea Rose will no longer be signed off in a pen name, but rather the Publisher name. In part of this exposure I am submitting my hand writing to the handwriting expert of the folks at H.R.C. It is only fair that you expose my weakness and strengths to all my (backlist) subscribers who may read a challenge of seeing my true character self as revealed by the sample handwriting. Since I am not taking the first step, it will only be fair that you send a copy of your handwriting to H.R.C. who knows maybe you'll discover unknown secrets about your inner self.

Thanks Every one

Eugene Goedel

Publisher

Eugene Goedel is an interesting character. He's introspective and a thinker. He likes to examine/analyze and explore ideas and concepts; he considers possibilities and enjoys planning and the art of strategy. Intellectually he is easily intrigued. Socially, Eugene is introverted, partly because he is sensitive to being criticized and because he is private about his true feelings. Despite this, he is intense and has strong passionate feelings. Therefore, Eugene needs someone who would be gentle with his feelings and encouraging. If criticized, he tends to hold grudges and may become critical when frustrated. With someone supportive and non-critical, Eugene would be at his best: optimistic, hard-working, resourceful and tenacious. For those ladies who wish to pursue Eugene, I recommend you talk to him about ideas and possibilities, the future and potentialities. Appeal to and identify with his hopes, dreams and plans. Do not talk too much about practical and concrete topics. Don't criticize him, but do support him and his beliefs. Do these things and he will become more open and energized, this will attract him to you. If you follow these principles, Eugene will think you're special.
